SWEET SECRETS

IN THE only interview he ever gave, to La Stampa, Michele Ferrero did not once remove his sunglasses. This was not just to shield his weak eyes, but to conceal himself.

His love of privacy also had a commercial purpose. He needed to keep secret the recipe for his hazelnut-chocolate spread, Nutella, of which 365m kilos are now consumed each year round the world, and which along with more than 20 other confectionery lines made him Italy's richest man, worth $23.4 billion. He laughed when he heard that the recipe for Coca-Cola was known to only a few directors of the company. Even fewer knew exactly what went into each jar of Nutella. Several other trade secrets, though, were revealed to the man from La Stampa. The first was, "Always do something different from the others." Nutella was a case in point. The basic gianduja paste, ground hazelnuts with a little cocoa, had been known in northern Italy since Napoleonic times. His father Pietro, who ran a corner café and pastry-shop in the small town of Alba, had revived this idea in the Second World War when cocoa was hard to get. Finding the perfect blend became a passion, and the teenage Michele caught it too as his father laboured in a back room, running out at all hours to test sweet spoonfuls on his wife and sons with the cry, "What do you think?" The paste was sold in solid loaves at first, then, as semi-solid "Supercrema", in jars; but Michele, taking over the recipe after his father's death in 1949, did what no one else had, and added enough drops of vegetable oil to make it beautifully spreadable. The result was revolutionary: chocolate-eating transformed from a special event to something everyday.

In 1964 he invented the name Nutella and the glass jar, and the rest was history.

He liked to move at his own pace. That way he kept the company as a family, one whose 4,000 workers were treated so kindly that they never went on strike and, when the Alba factory was flooded in 1994, just before Christmas, turned out with buckets and brooms to reopen it in 15 days.

Each product was exhaustively researched in his two labs, one in Alba and one in Monaco where he lived later, and tested out on board members. ("We eat all day," one complained.) Wherever he went he would visit shops incognito to check that his products were fresh.

DOLL-SIZE MEALS MADE FOR A LIVING

Kate Murdoch, 24, presents an Internet sensation called Tiny Kitchen, where she cooks miniature plates of food from scratch. Here's what she says about her unusual career:

'The kitchen I work in is tiny, as well as all the equipment. From making microscopic curry to dinky French toast, my videos are watched by hundreds of thousands of people. Why? Because of a trend for cute tiny things that originated in Japan.

Growing up, I'd never even heard of a job like mine. I was brought up in Woking, Surrey, and my dream was to become a dancer. But I loved cooking, baking in particular. I was also a fan of cookery shows, and when the craze for cupcakes really took off, that's when I started to take baking more seriously.

Over the next few years YouTube was becoming more popular, and I'd search for videos on how to make things. It was a bit of fun, but seeing how many people were doing it online made me want to start my own YouTube channel. I teamed up with my brother Alex, now 28, who was already a video producer, and in 2013 In The Kitchen With Kate was born, where I made normal-sized food.

When I uploaded the first video, I wasn't really expecting anyone to watch it, but I enjoyed making it, and working with Alex was fun, especially as we could do all the filming at home. Now I have 95,000 subscribers, and I've had over 7 million views of recipes like my coffee and walnut profiteroles and lemon meringue waffles.

A few years ago, I was approached by Tastemade UK, who had seen my videos and decided to launch Tiny Kitchen this year, and asked me to front it. Initially I thought it was a bit mad, but as I watched loads of videos on the US site, where they made things like tiny mac and cheese, or tiny quesadillas, I was utterly fascinated.

A set was built in the Tastemade studios, with custom-made miniature equipment. They sent the stove to me at home so I could practise, as I'd be cooking using a tea light. It actually works really well – sometimes too well. Because the quantities are so minute, things heat up fast, often in a few seconds! Water takes less than a minute to boil, while burgers only need three or four seconds on either side. So I've learned – through trial and error! – to take my time, you can't rush it. This means for a short, 90-second video, sometimes filming can take three hours, depending on the recipe.

Because we film in the Tastemade studios, there's usually crew around to help us eat the dishes after we've finished filming. As for people who want to try recreating any of the recipes at home, we even have a Tiny Cookbook – although you’d need pretty good eyesight to read the small print!

When it comes to the weekend, I prefer my mum and my brother to do the cooking. I’ll definitely make dessert though – and it will always be full sized.’

THE 'ANCIENT LIGHTS' WINDOWS OF ENGLAND

In many old brick buildings 0 around London, you'll find signs saying 'Ancient Lights' marked beneath individual windows. The phenomenon is not 1 _____ to London. 'Ancient Lights' signs can be found in Dorset, in Kent and in many places 2 _____ England.

'Ancient Lights' or the 'Right to light' is an English property law that gives house 3 _____ the right to receive 4 _____ light from and through a window if that 5 _____ window has been receiving light uninterrupted for 20 years. Once a person gains the right to ancient lights, 6 _____ owner of the adjoining land cannot obscure them, such as by erecting a building, 7 _____ a wall or planting trees. The levels of acceptable light, however, have not been objectively quantified. Instead, the law uses vague expressions such as "sufficient light". This has given rise to "specialists and expert witnesses in this field", and the court relies on them.

One so-called expert, Mr. Percy Waldram, suggested that ordinary people require one foot-candle of luminance for reading and other work. Waldram's methods have been in use 8 _____ the 1920s, but recently they have been subjected to 9 _____ criticism. The law originated in England in 1663, but its 10 _____ form is based on the Prescription Act 1832.

TRAVEL MEMORIES!

We 0 love (love) to think back of our time in the Moroccan desert.

Back in 2013 we 1 _____ (stay) in the wild city of Marrakesh, which we 2 _____ (plan) to visit for ages before. It was loud, it was colorful, many different smells 3 _____ (run) through our noses. It was truly a wow-experience to get to know Marrakesh. One day we got the opportunity to hop on a bus to a desert adventure. It was a bus tour with local guides on their way to the far desert, 4 _____ (stop) at a few small towns in the mountains. On the way we crossed the majestic Atlas Mountains, where there 5 _____ (be) tons of tiny villages 6 _____ (hide) in the middle of nowhere. Really impressive!

We spent the night in a small group of tents. In a bigger tent, we all came together to have dinner. After 7 _____ (enjoy) a Tajine loaded with cous cous and vegetables, our new friends started to play some music, and everybody started singing. The most impressive part of the whole night, however, was something different. 8 _____ (you, see) 1 Billion stars? Ever? This is how we felt whilst watching the clear sky in the cold desert.

We decided 9 _____ (wake up) early. We wanted to watch the sun climbing up behind the mountain, and feel the first shafts of sunlight. This is when we took the photo, trying to freeze those good travel memories. Now we wish we 10 _____ (stay) in that beautiful land forever.
